Introductory.

PHILADELPHIA is indebted to the thoughtful and munificent generosity of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Wilstach for the collection of art treasures herein catalogued. The former devoted a fortune, which he had gained in mercantile pursuits, to his own and his fellow-men's æsthetic cultivation, and during his busy life collected with great judgment and taste the paintings and statuary which form the nucleus of the Wilstach collection. The latter by economy and thrift so increased the fortune which she inherited from her husband as to enable her not merely to dedicate the collection to the perpetual enjoyment of her city, but also to afford it an endowment for its maintenance and increase such as few public galleries enjoy at the present time. This not merely insures continuous additions of valuable paintings and statuary to the present collection, but thereby justifies the reasonable expectation that it will become in the future one of the representative galleries of America.

To those charged with the administration of this trust, as well as to its beneficiaries, the people of Philadelphia and the art world in general, Mr. Wilstach's high ideal in selecting his pictures cannot be otherwise than interesting and instructive. He writes to a friend: "I have an object which I wish to keep steadily in view, and that is to purchase works of the best quality by men of acknowledged reputation, so that the whole collection, so far as it may be extended, will be a pretty fair representation of the strength of the artists whose works may be embraced within its limited scope. I am aware that artists do not at all times and on all trials of their skill throw out equally their abilities and as real representative pictures, but a small number of each one's works can be regarded by a critical knowledge and good taste as embodying within itself more than a fair average of the artist's well known and recognized ability. I do not wish to invest in any work, no matter how cheap, unless the work is really considered as one of the happy successes of the artist's, as doing so would defeat the object in view and lower the standard of the collection, notwithstanding the brilliant names that may be found in the catalogue."

To Mrs. Anna P. Wilstach is due the honor of giving legal form and effect to this purpose of providing Philadelphia with a representative collection of art works. In her original will, dated July 31st, 1873, she directed as follows:

" . . . Item. One other equal fourth part thereof unto the City of Philadelphia, if accepted by the Fairmount Park Commissioners as now authorized by Act of Assembly, upon the conditions and for the purposes following, namely:

To erect a secure Art Gallery in said park for the exhibition of pictures and works in the Fine Arts, on a plan similar to the new building for such exhibition at Dresden in Saxony, to be so built as to admit of extension with the increase of funds without impairing the harmony of the edifice or destruction of any portion of the original building; but if there should be a suitable permanent building left in said park after the Centennial celebration of 1876, in which pictures mentioned below may be received and preserved distinctly from other collections, so as to be known as the 'Wilstach Collection,' then the erection of another building may be omitted, and donations shall be accepted for said collection, and invited by the said Commissioners.

To the said City, but to be under the custody and control of the said Fairmount Park Commissioners, I also direct all my paintings, pictures and statuary, including those of my late husband, to be given and transferred to the said city for said purposes and placed in the 'Wilstach Collection.' Their exhibition shall be public, under regulations to be established by the said Fairmount Park Commissioners, and as soon as practicable shall be gratuitous, and the opening thereof shall be as soon after my decease as a gallery can be provided for their reception.

All the said fourth of said residuary estates not expended in erecting such hall of art, and the whole, if no such hall shall be required to be built out of said fund, shall be kept invested in lawful investments by the said Fairmount Park Commissioners, subject to the jurisdiction of the courts having control of testamentary trusts; and the income thereof shall be by them applied to the purchase of pictures, paintings, and statuary for said collection, always keeping in view the purpose of obtaining objects of the highest skill and beauty, that they may be the source of pleasure and the means of cultivation and refinement of the tastes of the people, be pure in sentiment, and never minister to vulgarity and vice.

Provided, however, that if the principal should exceed the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, then the excess over that sum may be used for the purchase of works of art."

In the final codicil to the said will, dated March 7th, A. D. 1890, the testatrix devised to the City of Philadelphia, as follows:

"... Item. I give and bequeath to the City of Philadelphia all my paintings, engravings, statuary, photographs, books of art, and catalogues of various galleries in Europe and America. Also my books denominated 'Dresden Gallery,' containing engravings of the paintings in the Dresden Galleries, in Dresden, Saxony, and all works of art owned by me at the time of my decease, in trust nevertheless, to, for and upon the following uses, intents and purposes, to wit: To place the said paintings, statuary, photographs and works of art in the possession and under the control of the Commissioners of Fairmount Park, to be placed by them in Memorial Hall in Fairmount Park, there to be preserved by them, and taken care of and kept in good order, as the nucleus or foundation of an Art Gallery for the use and enjoyment of the people. The collection to be kept together and known and designated by the name of the 'W. P. Wilstach Collection.' And I direct my Executors to transfer to the Commissioners of Fairmount Park, in like manner in trust, the one other fourth part of the residue and remainder of the said estate and estates, which said sum shall be invested in good and lawful securities by the said Commissioners of Fairmount Park. And the interest accruing therefrom shall be used for the maintenance of said Art Gallery, in keeping the same in good order and condition and providing of competent care-takers, as may be necessary to carry out, to its full and complete extent and meaning, the design I have in view in making this devise and bequest for the founding and sustaining an Art Gallery in Fairmount Park for the use and enjoyment and benefit of the public. . . ."

It is certainly a happy coincidence that, as anticipated by the testatrix, this collection should find its first home in the memorial building, which during the Centennial Exposition, contained the first cosmopolitan art collection exhibited in this country. How much of artistic inspiration America derived from this friendly rivalry of nations need not be here considered. Our national art was then in its infancy and suffered by comparison with its elder and more favored sisters. Invigorated by the stimulus of competition with the master-pieces of other lands, it has since grown to such sturdy manhood as to challenge comparison with the best of every clime. In this respect as in many others, America, to use the apt words of President Cleveland at the opening of the Columbian Exposition, need ask "no allowance on the score of youth." In a building, therefore, intimately connected with the development of American art, and commemorating the first centenary of the Republic, this collection is happily inaugurated. It cannot fail to carry out the noble purpose of its donors, "to be the source of pleasure and the means of cultivation and refinement of the tastes of the people." In a community, world famous for its great material interests, it will teach the infinite utility of beauty. Generations unborn will honor its donors and draw artistic inspiration from their noble gift. This is their monument, serving to perpetuate the memory of their philanthropy and public spirit to the after ages. May it be constructed by those, to whom the trust is confided, in the spirit of Ruskin, whose great message to men was the high moral purpose of art, "When we build, let us think that we build forever. Let it not be for the present delight nor the present use alone; let it be such work as our descendants will thank us for and let us think, as we lay stone on stone, that a time is to come when these stones will be held sacred because our hands have touched them and that men will say as they look upon the labor and wrought substance of them: 'See, this our fathers did for us.'"

Strong drawing and technique, fine color and composition, directed by a man of thought and of most tenderly sympathetic and poetic feeling. In 1878, Victor Hugo wrote Breton, who was litterateur as well as artist: "To be twice a poet; to be like Lamartine and also like Corot; to be by the strophe and by the palette; this is given to you, Monsieur. I thank you for your charming book, and I send you double plaudits." Five years later, after Breton's Jeanne was published, Gambetta writes him: "I have read your works, I have seen them, and I cannot tell even to you if it is the poet or the painter that most deeply touched, affected, conquered and fascinated me."

A strong draughtsman and a manner, if somewhat conventional, exceedingly refined and distinguished. Painted previous to 1861 in the style of David, but later, feeling more the influence of the modern world around him, produced his greatest works. During the Third Empire, painted many portraits, his manner lending itself particularly to the painting of aristocratic and graceful court ladies. His celebrated "Birth of Venus" is at the Luxembourg.

A life of great usefulness and beauty. Useful, in that he so markedly filled a place in the great modern impulse of art and perpetuated that which he found, the spirit, the depths of atmosphere, the light, the movement, the exquisite feeling of pulsating nature, particularly when the dawning or the fading of the day softens sharp detail into more tender harmony. "This poetical perfume is a personality and supersedes the necessity of signature" writes René Ménard. Beautiful, in that "Père Corot" gave the benefit of his experience and large income to those about him, especially to his struggling contemporaries.

One of the famous group of Barbizon painters, Daubigny has made the river scenery of central France world famous. Light, air, and color were studied from the floating studio he had constructed and when the clear day was slowly fading into the night his mind became exceedingly keen and appreciative "The art of this illustrious master," writes Edmond About, "consists in choosing well a bit of country, and painting it as it is, enclosing in its frame all the simple and naive poetry which it contains. . . . How willingly would we sojourn in that one, beside that fresh water, where the cows take their evening bath! Night falls, the thrushes send forth their last cry, the nightingale begins to sing."

Officer of the Legion of Honor, 1851.

"The distinctive qualities of Decamps," writes Hamerton, "may be very briefly enumerated. He had deep pathos and poetry, and was profoundly moved by a certain kind of roughness and wildness in nature and in men; he was a powerful and masterly colorist, and his painting is, in its way, as excellent as it is original." Of his academic study, Decamps tells us; "I was received in the atelier of M. Abel de Pujol. I worked willingly at the beginning. Unfortunately my master, who was kind and indulgent, and absorbed in his own labors, was little qualified to make me understand the utility and importance of studies which to me seemed little less than monotonous. I took a dislike to the work and quitted the atelier; I tried at home some little pictures, they were bought and my education as a painter was missed." In the Chefs d' Ecole, M.

Born of Spanish parentage, this landscape and figure painter, though a faulty draughtsman, had the glow, splendor and the fire of the South. At the age of fifteen years he left the porcelain manufacturer, to whom he had been apprenticed, to go to Paris, there, although extremely poor and crippled by the loss of a leg, to enter the arena of life. Success crowned his efforts to a large degree and with a lavish hand he dispensed that which he made to those in need and distress. It was in the forest of Fontainebleau with its majestic oaks, deep recesses, and gleams of sunlight, that Diaz found his greatest inspiration.

A master of two distinct modes of expression, that of the brush and of the pen. His pen pictures of African travel, his criticisms of the old masters of Holland and Belgium, shine forth in a nation of literary lights, famous for their descriptive and critical work. His brush pictures have a deep and pure appreciation, a delicacy of treatment that brought him speedily to the front rank of great French painters. One is amply compensated for the slight faultiness of drawing, the result of insufficient academic training, by the comprehensive grasp of his subject, the glowing color and poetic feeling.

Probably the most popular of modern artists. Certainly few have reaped so great a reward for conscientious labor, with the unimpaired ability to enjoy and profit by it, as has been granted to Gérôme. In most of the art galleries and private collections of the world his pictures are to be found and honors of every kind have been showered upon this wonderfully accomplished and even workman, this superb draughtsman, scholarly thinker, sculptor as well as painter.

A man of highly sensitive organization, his earlier works were efforts to give pictorial form to musical impressions received from the works of Beethoven, Schumann, Mendelssohn, Liszt, and from old melodies and hymns. These proved rather incomprehensible and full of strange imagination but very interesting and inventive. Of his later works, "The Lion's Bride" and "The Last Token" are probably the best known, the latter being in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.

From early youth an ardent student. Being of marked religious tendencies, the young Meyer thought seriously at one time of devoting himself to missionary work, but the shock to his broad and liberal mind of hearing a celebrated minister say that "Art is an invention of the Devil" and that "religious pictures should be thrown in the sea" determined him to devote himself to art which he felt to be the "handmaid of religion." His first pictures were of religious subjects, and later family life found him at his best. It is said that eleven hundred pictures have left his easel, a proof of the application of the motto placed in his studio, "Make the best use of your time; it never returns."

 Created an Austrian Baron, 1882.

In 1846, in the village of Munkacs, Hungary, this artist was born. He lost his mother soon after his birth, and his father, who had taken part in the insurrection of 1848, died in prison. An aunt undertook the care of the little "Misha" but her house was entered by a band of robbers, and every one murdered with the exception of the helpless child. An uncle then assumed the guardianship, but being too poor to educate the boy, apprenticed him to a joiner as soon as he could handle a tool. After accomplishing the hard day's work required of him, Munkácsy at night taught himself to read and write. At eighteen he became a journeyman carpenter and on the pittance received, about four dollars a month, managed not only to support himself but by abstaining from much needed food, purchased the necessary books to continue his education. By reason of these deprivations a severe illness ensued, and on his recovery his uncle, who was then in better circumstances, offered to assist him to become an artist, a career the young man greatly desired. His apprenticeship to art again shows continuous struggle, first at home, then in Germany, where a disease of the eyes forced him to spend six months in the hospital and threatened him with total blindness. Yet it was during this time that the brave young student, nothing daunted, dreamed of and finally planned the picture here exhibited, which even to-day he speaks of as his masterpiece. It illustrates a custom in Hungary, where a man, when condemned to death, is visited in his cell on the day before his execution by his townspeople, who come either out of simple curiosity or to bring a contribution towards a mass for the criminal's soul. After he had recovered the use of his eyes, the picture was commenced, although all advised the young man to go back to his trade, the difficulties to be overcome as an artist seeming insurmountable. When the picture, which is painted on the back of an old pew, was half finished, poverty prevented him from obtaining even the necessary paints. At this time the collector of these pictures, Mr. Wilstach, heard of the young artist, and going to his studio instantly recognized the merit of his work. He purchased the picture and paid for it in advance that the artist might have the wherewithal to complete it. He then sent the picture to the Paris Salon, where its recognition as a work of extraordinary merit was instantaneous. Rarely has so sharp a contrast occurred in a human life as then followed, for reputation and wealth came rapidly and all Paris and then the world delighted to honor this vigorous, intense and powerfully dramatic painter. On a visit to his native land he was received with high honor. His great religious pictures, "Christ on Calvary" and "Christ before Pilate," subsequently purchased by Mr. John Wanamaker of this city, were exhibited throughout Europe and America, and inspired general and profound admiration. In the generations to come, Michael Lieb, called from his birthplace, Michael Munkácsy, will be regarded as the great painter of scriptural subjects of the nineteenth century.

Supported himself while studying at Madrid by drawing and engraving on wood. During the summer fostered his love for nature by wandering through the country, living from hand to mouth, often the companion of gypsies, but studying and absorbing qualities that proved the foundation of his success. He won the first Prix de Rome ever given at Madrid for landscape, which afforded him the opportunity of four years' study in either Rome or Paris and it was in the latter city, with Zamacois, Meissonier and Daubigny to encourage him and the American art patron, Mr. William Stewart, to advance his interests, that he climbed rapidly the ladder of fame. His work in oil and water colors is equally brilliant, animated and delicate, his pictures fairly sparkling with crisp, sunny effects.

settled in Paris, later to divide his time between that city and Kronberg, near Frankfort. His work is dashing, bold, resolute and full of fine mellow color and poetic sentiment. A delightful letter to Schreyer reads: "I came with Hert and Martinet to see you. You are gone out, but your genius remains at home. We have admired this marvelous picture of 'Chasse-Niege,' so true, so picturesque, so dramatic. I am egotistic enough to believe that I am a good judge in this matter. A powerful landscape and animal painter. His superb grasp of the subject is full of force, freedom and directness. His knowledge of the animals he paints, their appearance, motions, life and peculiar characteristics, is complete. "The poetry of the fields has never been more feelingly interpreted than by him," writes Hamerton. "In the 'Oxen Going to Work' we have a page of rustic description as good as anything in literature, of mighty oxen marching slowly to their toil! Who, that have seen these creatures work, can be indifferent to the steadfast grandeur of their nature? They have no petulance, no hurry, no nervous excitability, but they will bear the yoke upon their necks, and the thongs about their horns, and push forward without flinching from sunrise until dusk."

The work of this great Belgian animal painter is very popular. Ottley is authority for the fact that after Baron Rothschild gave Verboeckhoven ten thousand francs for a landscape painting he never painted a picture of the same size for less. Although he devoted his time mainly to the painting of animals, he also attempted portrait painting and sculpture.

With a marked preference for the poetical aspect of nature, Voltz is an earnest student of animal life both in its surroundings and in its connection with humanity. A man of great industry, it is said of him that having been disabled by a temporary but very severe accident to his right hand he, nothing daunted, taught himself to use his left with equal dexterity and skill. Most of his works, nearly 2,000, are in private collections.

 Medals in Paris, 1864-69, Utrecht, 1866.

"There is a certain point in animal painting which is not easily passed, but which is well known to all who practically attempt that branch of art. You may be able to paint a cow or a horse quite respectably in some very common attitude, which the animal can be induced to retain for several minutes at a time, but it does not follow that you are able to put the animal in one of those highly expressive and living postures which do not remain unaltered for one second. To do this you must have some memory and imagination, and a knowledge of the animal; far surpassing any ordinary accuracy. All the great animal painters have this power and continually use it, the great amount of life which all recognize in their pictures being mainly due to it. Otto Weber has it in the same degree as Troyon and the Bonheurs, and he has all other accomplishments necessary to the production of a first-rate cattle picture."—Hamerton's Painting in France.

WYLE (Robert)

Philadelphia.

Born, Isle of Man, 1839. Died, Brittany, 1877.

Medal at Paris Salon, 1872.

This artist, in whose career Mr. Wilstach took a deep personal interest, went to Paris in 1865 to study with Barye, intent upon becoming a sculptor. He was well equipped in the principles of art in the schools of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, and had, for the four years previous, there held the position of curator, exhibiting annually during this time, busts and medallions in clay and ivory. He finally settled in Brittany, where he turned his attention to painting, continuing to show in this medium, that pronounced and delicate feeling for form which had drawn him to sculpture. His pictures are painted in a style full of truthfulness and authority, with much solidity and breadth of treatment. Wylie is represented at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York.

Diploma to the memory of deceased artists, E. U. 1878,

A man of keen wit and originality, painting with pure and intense color in a style polished and complete. His pictures are mainly satires rendered with great force and ability. Eugene Benson says: "Zamacois has a suspicion of malice that must be delightful to the compatriots of Voltaire," and later that he is "kindred to Molière. If you could suppose something of Molière's genius, embodied in a series of sonnets, you would have a just literary expression of Zamacois as a painter." Dying when but thirty years of age he left the memory of a career of unusual brilliancy prematurely ended.

SCULPTURE.

MARBLES.

POWERS (Hiram)

Florence.

Born, Vermont, 1807. Died Florence, 1873.

His early life was spent on a farm. Attended school for one year at Cincinnati, then found employment there superintending a reading room, but as he said, "was forced to leave that place as his clothes and shoes were fast leaving him." Became in turn clerk in a store, commercial traveller and mechanic in a clock and organ factory. In 1826, frequently visited the studio of Mr. Erkstein and there discovered his own latent talent for sculpture. With a quickly acquired knowledge of modelling, he secured a position as general assistant and artist in the wax-work department of the Western Museum, Cincinnati, where certain of his ingenious illustrations of Dante's Inferno awakened general attention. Powers then studied modelling and casting thoroughly and in 1834 went to Washington, where he modelled portraits of the President and many leading statesmen. In 1837, he settled in Florence, where his statue of Eve, pronounced a masterpiece by Thorwaldsen, and his celebrated Greek Slave, were given to the world.

RINEHART (W. H.)

Rome.

Born, Maryland, 1825. Died, Rome, 1874.

Employed in a Baltimore marble-yard, he studied in the night schools of the Maryland Institute and from 1855 to 1858 in Italy. On his return to Baltimore he executed many portrait busts, a fountain figure for the Washington Post Office, and two figures, "Indian" and "Backwoodsman" to support the clock in the House of Representatives. Later, he went again to Rome to spend the rest of his life. His statue of Chief Justice Taney, ordered by the State of Maryland, is at Annapolis. He is represented at the Peabody Institute by "Clytie," which he considered his masterpiece, and at the Corcoran Gallery by "Rebecca."

Chevalier of the Legion of Honor, 1853. Officer, 1855.

"Keenly tormented by his intense desire to become a sculptor" as Barye expressed it, his apprenticeship of twenty-two years was one of great poverty, disappointment and patient labor. His love and unwavering belief in his art, his capacity for incessant study, his complete insight and artistic knowledge of the character, mode of life, power and fascination, of animal nature and his comprehension or arrested movement was that of genius. A thorough understanding of metals and casting enabled Barye to pass judgment on every bronze that left the foundry before affixing his signature. He lectured at Versailles in 1850, also at the Louvre, 1854. Léon Bonnat writes: "Barye is one of the greatest artists of the age, I may even say of all the ages. If I had a comparison to make I should think of Balzac. Barye has understood the animal and conveyed it with a power equal to that which Balzac has manifested in those passionate researches, in which he has so powerfully interpreted the heart of man. Both have left their ineffaceable stamp upon the world." The largest collection of Barye's works is at the Corcoran Gallery, Washington.

NOTE.

In the library, marked No. 173, is an engraving of the famous "L'Hémicycle du Palais des Beaux Arts." This great work was designed and painted by Paul Hippolyte Delaroche for the amphitheatre of the Paris Academy of Fine Arts, a hall used for the assembling of the students of the Academy, for the distribution of prizes, etc. On its semicircular wall is depicted by the genius of the artist a mighty array of witnesses, the master-spirits of Art, from the time of Pericles to that of Louis XIV. In the central group are seated Apelles, the painter; to his right, Ictinus, the architect, and to his left, the sculptor, Phidias. Lower down are four female figures, personifying the four great schools of art—the Greek, Roman, Gothic or Mediæval, and the Art of the Renaissance. The half-kneeling figure in front represents the Genius of Fame, at her side the laurel wreaths for distribution. To the right of the spectator are assembled the celebrated architects; opposite to them on the left, the famous sculptors. Beyond these on both sides appear the great painters; to the right, those eminent as designers; to the left, the great colorists. The painting is 50 feet in length and 15 feet in height. The figures in the foreground are colossal; those farther back, life size.
